TUESDAY MORNING, AUGUST 31, 1858.

VICTIMS OF THE "FOOL KILLER." Away down about Milton, N. C., a certain individual, yelept "Jesee Holmes" has constituted himself a vigilance committee of one. Armed with a huge club, he traverses the country in quest of evil-doers and silly pecple, and when he meets with persons of either class, he "mauls" them severely with his club. It is believed, however, that "Uncle Jesse" is a myth, and that the accounts of his exploits, as published in the Milton Chronicle, are mere contributious to that journal by some discerning writer, who makes use of type and ink to criticise the follies and vices of his neighbors. Among the sinners and stupids against whom his vaticinations are directed, we may enumerate the following, copied from another quarter, but still very applicable as a partial category of the "fool killer's victime:"

A man striving from mere vanity to make a name, and fancying that he is made of dif-ferent materials from his fellow creatures, and that he does them a favor by living among them, and who does not care by what means be rises, so that he does rise.

A man in business intent only on making money, as though that were the only thing worth living for, and not caring what wrongs may be carried on in his establishment, nor how his customers may be tricked, so he makes a profit.

A young man in want of a wife, choosing a partner for life merely because she has a pret-ty face, dances well, or sings nice songs, or play's nimbly upon the piano, and never asking whether she can make a shirt or roast a leg of mutton, or whether she can make a home bappy.

A man frequenting the bar room, or the tavero parlor, night after night, (while his wife sits at home, perhaps darning his stockings or making a trock for the little one out of an old gown,) bent on his own selfish gratification, as though he had any more right to Certificates of Packages, 10 wle. tickets, $80 00 be wasting time or money than his wife has.

A boy at school looking upon learning and knowledge as something invented for his torment, and forgetting that youth is the only seed time, and that parents frequently have to make great sacrifices to give their children an education.

A man trying to make himself believe that he may indulge in certain secret sins and vices, if the world does not know of them; that so long as he can make people believe he is good and virtuous, he may hug private wickedness to his heart.

Somebody in a house, where the servants have a kept down look, whisper ugly things of their master and mistress, and are stinted for food or recreation; where the children look timid and unhappy, never laughing the merry laughs of childhood: and where the sunshine seems less bright than elsewhere.

A man who refuses to do a good turn when the opportunity comes in his way, not speaking a good word for his friend when his friend needs it, thinking very much more about his convenience and what the world either of those cities. will say, than of what conscience commands.

EVANS AND STEPHENSON.

In the English life of Stephenson, the great railroad projector, it is claimed that he was the first one who brought forward the idea, in a practical form, of the locomotive, and first to see that great speed could be attained by steam carriages. But so early as 1787, Oliver Evane, of Pennsylvania, obtained a patent for a locomotive ergine from the State of Maryland. The Pennsylvania Legislature, to whom he applied at the same time, thought him mad when he proposed to apply his steam engine to a boat and wagon. In 1813 be published a curious book in reply to some To be drawn under the Superintendence of Commishe makes some bold predictions in regard to railroads, asserting that the time will come when "a carriage will set out from Washington in the morning, the pasengers will breakfast at Baltimore, dine at Philadelphia, and sup in New York the same day."

He goes on to show how "two sets of railways will be laid" in order that the carrages 'may pass each other in different directions and travel by night as well as by day." He claimed to get a speed of fifteen to twenty I prize of miles an hour, and his plans are marvellously similar to those afterwards adopted by Stephenson. As the latter never saw these, it is no detraction from the Erglish inventor's great | Certificates of Package 25 Wholes merit to mention the fact. Some of Evan's, predictions are curious. He must have started the old fegies of his day by saying, "when wagons, driven by steem shall transport passer gers and the products of the interior with great dispatch to maritime markets, who can conceive the great rise in the value of every man's land throughout the whole Western country, and especially to those adjacent to navigable waters? Who can form any conception of the vast benefits that must scorue? The millions of dollars, could they | be aggregated, would astonish the calculator. How people stared no doubt at the supposed lunstic! In 1803 Evans was exhibiting a steam-engine of his invention which was engaged in cutting stone, to a large crowd of spectators. Among these was a former chairman of a committee in the Legislature which had reported, in 1786, against granting him a patent for a locomotive engine. Evans addressed him, and said, among other remarks, "If you had granted me the exclusive right for twenty five years it (the ergine) might have been driving wagons, boats, and unils many years ago." The reply was, "to tell the truth, Mr. Evans, we thought you were deranged when you spoke of making steam
